

International Journal of Electrical Machining

Call for Papers - International Journal of Electrical Machining

The International Journal of Electrical Machining (IJEM), published yearly by the Japan Society of Electrical Machining Engineers, is an international vehicle for the dissemination of information and new concepts embracing a wide range of electrical machining methods. The purpose of the Journal is to promote understanding the principles, highlighting a variety of applications, and continuing and accelerating the innovations of the electrical machining processes such as electrical discharge machining, electro-chemical machining, laser machining, electron beam machining, ion beam machining, ultra-sonic machining, rapid prototyping techniques, combined processes, and their integration into manufacturing. Central to the journal's content are technical and scientific papers and notes relating to original work carried out in universities, research and development establishments, and within industry.

All persons active in the above mentioned fields are invited to consider submitting a contribution to the journal. The paper could be a full-length presentation, or a shorter account of recent work. The submitted papers will be reviewed by the papers review committee to keep the technical standard of the journal at a high level.

The deadline of submission is October 31, every year. Persons who are interested in submitting papers and want to receive further information are requested to contact:
